312 Dharga n Tmsaman: This ditch in May 1938 had a flow of 256 liters per second. It is located on the same bank of the river, and down-
[402] stream from the Aghzar Amzzyan ditch. It moves two mills (one belonging to the Muhammad nd-Hajj Ussar, and the other to Muhammad n Tahir), and it has three turns, one for the tribe of the Thimsaman[156] and two for that of the Aith Waryaghar (lineage of Aith Musa w 'Amar, subclan of the Aith r-'Abbas, clan of the Aith 'Ari), as follows:[157]

1st Day: Ifthisen (Aith Musa w 'Amar)

2nd Day: Thimsaman

3rd Day: Ihankuren (Aith Musa w 'Amar)

The three other ditches on this bank, Sidd Jdid, Sidd 'Ain Harri and Sidd Swani, only have water in times of abundance:

Sidd Jdid: At the end of May 1938 this ditch had a flow of 40 liters per second. It originates one kilometer below Dharga n Tmsaman, in the crossroad from Bu Srama[158] and the (Spanish-built) airport to the Thimsaman.[159]

Sidd 'Ain Harri: Born near the road leading from the Granja of Imzuren to Truguth (Thimsaman).

Sidd Swani: The last ditch on the west bank of the Nkur, some two kilometers from the mouth of the river.

East Bank:

312 Dharga n Tufdhisth (???--"ditch of the hammer"??): At the point
619 called Aghbar u Yidir, in front of the makhazniya post of Imudh, up-
675 stream from the Thanda Hawa pond, a division of waters is originated
217 between the tribes of the Axt Tuzin and the Aith Waryaghar in equal
[103] parts, according to a document in the archives of the Bureau at Ajdir,[160] which pertains to the agreement to which both these tribes came.
